DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICEREPORT FOR CONVENTION ISSUE OF ASTA TRAVEL NEWS

by

Nicholas Craig
General Manager
Caribbean Tourist Association

The Caribbean Tourist Association marked its tenth anniversary this year with a program of growth and revitalization aimed at fomenting closer liaison among its members and an aggressive promotion campaign to strengthen one of the basic aims of the Association - the persuasion of tourists to spend more time and money in the area and meeting increased competition from other highly organized tourist areas.

At our tenth annual meeting in Caracas last April, we elected an active slate of forward-looking officers and directors, led by Dr. Carlos Padilla of Venezuela as president, Sam Levy of Jamaica as vice president, Frank Bell of Alcoa Steamship Company as secretary-treasurer, and Michael Kuiperi of Aruba and Ralph Breshears of the Estate Carleton Hotel in St. Croix as directors.

The Association now represents Active Government members, comprising 30 separate islands and countries, 18 Active Industry members, comprising carriers and hotel chains and 221 Associate members, comprising hotels, tour operators, travel agents, publications, shops and services. For the first time in our history, each of these groups is now represented by at least one officer on the board of directors.

As a major step toward meeting our goal of bringing more tourists to the Caribbean, we have reorientated our procedures by utilizing business methods in CTA's operations. I have been in the business end of the travel and transportation industries for more than 30 years -- and I am convinced that CTA can promote the Caribbean area in the same way that carriers sell their services.

I consider area promotion the same as the promotion of a tangible product. We have many things to sell -- the beauty of the Caribbean, the proximity to the heavily populated sections of the United States, our excellent air and sea carriers, our tropical climate in the winter and our pleasant year-round weather, our cruises, our fine modern resorts and hotels, our sports and social activities, our local color, our diversified traditions, languages and historic backgrounds.

These are real attributes of the Caribbean, and selling them is the same as selling commodities or transportation.

We have initiated a limited advertising campaign, largely in the travel press. I feel that our area should be promoted primarily through travel agents, and many of our activities will be aimed in this direction.

In selling the Caribbean we are counting on the active support of travel agents. To me the agent is the one person, more than any other, who can direct the sale of travel and I feel that the agent's influence, already much greater than is generally believed, will grow in the future. Most of you have personally visited the Caribbean and know the attractions of the area. I'm sure that you will agree that it has everything your clients want and we are counting on you as our sales force.

As this year draws to a close, I must admit that we have been, and are, faced with problems.

Firstly, sensational newspaper stories about "trouble" in the Caribbean have played up incidents all out of proportion to their possible effect on our member islands and countries.

We have initiated and will continue a vigilant and strong program aimed at combating generalities and loose talk of this nature, and proving that, with the exception of one isolated spot, the Caribbean remains a calm and peaceful area to visit. Let's face it -- there's more trouble every day in any one of a dozen major cities in the U. S. than there is in all our 30 member countries. Nowhere else in the world will the American traveler find a more friendly reception -- and a more peaceful and enjoyable vacation, than in any of our member islands and countries. In all our public contacts we will continue to get this message across.

Secondly, adverse legislation, especially in the reduction of duty-free quotas, poses a problem to an important segment of tourism in the Caribbean.

We opposed this proposal when it was made, and will use all means at our disposal to reverse this decision. At the same time, we will remain especially alert to the consequences of future proposed legislation which may affect our area.

Despite these problems, tourism in the Caribbean has continued to grow this year, and will continue to prosper. We have a good product -- agents will sell it and clients will buy it.

We look forward to new records in 1962 and extend our thanks, and promise of cooperation, to the thousands of agents who have recognized the Caribbean as the world's most delightful year-round vacationland.
